OUR FOREIGN LETTER. The Rime Boon Brackenfels

Our party of four left Cologne at 9 o'clock on the elegant bout "Kniser Wil-TERMS-Two Bollars per Year in Advance. helm." We stepped abound armed with opera glasses and with a thousand questions on the tip of our tongues. It was a sats to lovely day, and sunbeams glanced and sparkled on the Rhine, the pride of the German, whose unequalled scenery he ever sings and praises. No wonder the study German of yore fought on its to are not 1.11 for mak wont is return. We will banks with desperation against Roman invasion; and no wonder the present German claims the Rhine as his river, for it runs through his fatherland, and he leaves it with a tender devotion. It is truly one of natures richest gifts in beauty, and even my imagination failed me in anticipating its grandeur. I look back now on the time passed on the Rhine with its old mouldering eastles, its vine-elad hills, and the wild, weird stories and legends connected with this and that spot, as one of supreme happiness. The Rhine, the stream Censer rowned, and whose waters were so often dyed with Roman and Teutonic blood; the stream over which the French engles so often soured triumphantly when an Island shaded by many trees and beautiful flowers is next seen. The large house upon it was once a nunnery, but appressed by Napoleon; again restored by the interession of Josephine, with the reservation that no new additions should be made, and now only the spirits of the nuns keep their vigils on their beloved island, as the building is now used for an educational establishment.

At Nemvild live a body of Moravina brothers, an industrious people, having their laws, forcing them to be austere and rigid in their habits. On this part of the Rhine are a good many extinct cravisit them.

You next arrive at Coblentz, a large city, containing many fine buildings and churches. The greatest objects of interest are the King's castle, and the Ehsenbreistein, a fortification opposite the city, across the river. It crowns a precipitous hill and looks as formidable, so it is said, as the "Rock of Gibralter." It was presented by the King of the Franks in 636 to the Archbishop of Trevis. It is conjectured that Stanley did not tell all he knows, or else Livingstone did not permit him to discover all there was to be found out. A story is revived that was current some years since, but which, when it came to light in a Cleveland paper, on your side of the Atlantic, was so vigorously pooh-poohed, men fancied there was no foundation for it. This story was to effect that the reason why Livingstone did not come home was that he was happily married in Central Africa, and could neither bring his princess with him nor tear himself away from her facinating embraces. This story it will be remembered, was said to have been brought down to Zanzibar by Arabs trading with Uzizi.
